The Changing Face of Public Communications During an Era of Unrest
Marcello 4404 | LE02
Presented by

In 2020, challenges to the way law enforcement professionals do their jobs came under scrutiny, with calls for change ranging from complete defunding and the banning of certain practices to a renewal of community-based patrolling and stronger public oversight. None of these proposed changes has come without the large and raucous voices of social and mainstream media.

How your agency responds to attacks from the public and media — across all platforms — can make or break how it’s seen by your community’s residents and effect real and meaningful change when needed. This seminar takes a deep dive into the what, when and how you say what you need to and to whom you should be saying it, all while maintaining an uncompromising transparency that fosters confidence in your agency’s officers by the public.

The unsightly side of ranges will be highlighted, involving storage closets, the dirty side of the range, spent brass, used filters, hazmat and OSHA issues. This session will provide the most current procedures and correct processes to maintain a clean and healthy shooting range.

Law Enforcement Handguns and Reflex Sights
Marcello 4404 | LE03

Presented by

The tactical benefits of reflex sights, commonly known as red-dot sights, on military and law enforcement rifles and shotguns have been well documented over more than two decades of service. This presentation explains how red-dot sights work and why their application with handguns provides a quantum leap in training, liability reduction and officer survival for agencies everywhere.

Time to Step Up Our Game. Why Do We Need to Train Officers Like We Do Athletes?
Marcello 4404 | LE05

Presented by VirTra

People never stop learning, but how they learn differs due to many factors, including age. Recent discoveries in how adults learn are changing how law enforcement design and implement training processes these days to maximize training results. It used to be that back-to-back training hours were the best way to develop skills. But science is revealing how the use of interval and interleave practice regimens are proving to be a much better way to instill long-term change. Putting this science to work, law enforcement departments can achieve more with less, something that’s increasingly more important in these challenging times.

SPEAKER: Lon Bartel

Roles of the Law Enforcement Sniper

Marcello 4401A | LE08

Bill Bergiadis, a noted authority on indoor and outdoor shooting range OSHA compliance, inventor of the patented Troy System, and co-developer of the USACE shooting range test procedure, covers the ins and outs of these solutions and shows how any shooting range of any size can put them to work.

Law Enforcement Firearm Ranges and the Training Triangle
Marcello 4404 | LE09

Presented by

Today’s law enforcement officers face a greater challenge than ever in our history as they attempt to do their jobs in an environment filled with anti-police activism, cellphone cameras and many people ready and willing to serve as instant judge and jury in an officer-involved use-of-force incident. Effective use-of-force training includes the mechanics of the firearm handling, as well as when to use them and when to use other means. The “Training Triangle” accomplishes these goals, with classroom instruction, live-fire range work and simulator training forming a complete training opportunity. This course discusses the use of each of these approaches and the best practices and the shortfalls of each to help firearm instructors better prepare officers to do their jobs.
